TORIES JOIN MOVE TO CUT STONEHENGE POLICING COSTS

New bid to end illegal festivals

SEVEN Tory members of Wiltshire County Council have voted with the Opposition in a bid to stem the cost of policing the summer solstice at Stonehenge.

Labour councillor for Bemerton Ricky Rogers won their backing when he called for a meeting of "interested parties" to try and find a way of cutting the annual cost of preventing illegal festivals at the monument.

"I cannot support this open cheque book approach," he said.
Last year it cost £245,400 and since 1985 the total bill has been £2,799,660.

"I find that staggering and alarming, especially when you think of other things that could have been spent on - particularly when we are all so concerned about cuts in services."

By David Vallis

But police committee chairman Lt-Col Derek Jarvis said he would not support anything that might lead to any kind of festival at the stones.

"We have spent years trying to stop illegal festivals, lawlessness and gatherings of New Age travellers with considerable success," he said.

Col Jarvis added that this had been due to the powers the council gave to its chief executive to act swiftly to prevent travellers gathering in strength. It was a classic example of prevention being better than cure.

He said there was nothing to stop anyone holding a legal festival with the consent of landowners and a licence from the district council, but added:

"We have a clear duty to protect the people of Wiltshire from the disruption these gatherings bring."

Council leader Peter Chalke, of Salisbury, said members should be under no illusions about the kind of people involved with illegal pop festivals.

"They are pedlars of death," he said. "Their only interest is to sell drugs. I don't want to introduce our children into their evil ways. I don't want to do anything that would add respectability to their activities. We don't want them to be given the opportunity to entice our children."

The Tory member for Alderbury, Andrew Christie Miller, who supported Cllr Rogers, said no-one was proposing a legal festival. What he proposed was consistent with council policy over many years. They needed a meeting of all interested parties to see if there was another solution.

Cllr Rogers's proposal was approved by 40 votes to 27.

MEMBERS also voted to renew full powers given to chief executive Andrew Browning to prevent any unauthorised festival or illegal gathering in connection with the solstice.

INTERESTING PARTIES

The Tory party in Wiltshire is revolting. Never mind the headline and the ritual abuse from the hardliners, this article in the Salisbury Journal suggests that the cost of eight years of unnecessary paramilitary operations is beginning to take its toll. In the past, proposals to talk to "all interested parties" have always been voted down by the Tories, as this implies the possibility of a compromise solution. English Heritage won't talk about access to the Stones at the summer Solstice as they have no way of accommodating those who want to come and party as well, or instead. Everyone knows that what is needed is a bit of MoD land, but English Heretics have neither the will nor the clout to arrange this. The district council makes the notorious procession bans, but it is the county council that picks up the bill, and is best placed to find a way out of the ridiculous position all sides are trapped in. Perhaps now is a time to talk. On our side, we have learned just how ruthless and unrelenting the authorities are prepared to be, and less people are now likely to demand the impossible. The authorities too must realise they were misinformed when they were advised in 1985 that problems at the Solstice would disappear in two or three years.

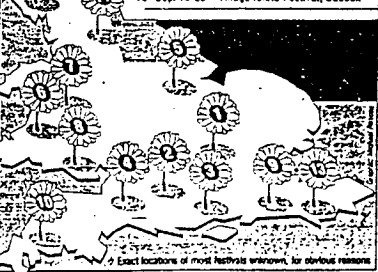

Are you an "interested party"? If so, keep in touch with the Campaign, as we will be trying to find out if there is anything to this apparently positive step.

Meanwhile, faced with English Heritage's inability to manage relatively few people wanting access at a quiet time of the year, some groups have started talking to each other about how they would do it. A steering group set up by PADRAS (see contacts list) is taking this a stage further by arranging an open Stonehenge Access Conference at Oxford on 24/25th April. This would not be a public meeting between sides, but an opportunity for representatives (in the loosest sense) of "interested parties" wanting access to the Stones at the Solstice to discuss how to manage themselves. Contact Padras for further details. Or come to the Glastonbury open meeting on March 21st. This is an annual event intended to allow people who don't get to the monthly London meetings to have their say.

The Glastonbury Order of Druids were the only people prepared to go and listen to English Heritage's latest excuses at a meeting in October. They report that Heritage have cancelled their plans to open this Winter, claiming they wouldn't get a public entertainments licence. (They don't need one!) They now say maybe Winter '93, Winter '94, then Summer '95. This would be done using a limited number of tickets, although this time they could be passed on after use.

 - 12 Sept 11-13 - SilverMoon Free Festival, Cornwall
 - 13 Sept 18-20 - Village Idons Festival, Sussex

This is what the 'Independent' told us in May would happen in '92 - Torpedo Town on Aug 8th is missing. (Bucks what?) Until there is a new festi list this is probably a rough guide to what will happen next year.

DEC 91. English Heritage's plans for a new visitor centre and to close off the Stonehenge landscape are rejected by both the planning committee and the full Salisbury Council.

A small Solstice gathering takes place on the same farm as for the previous equinox, but in a different field which some did not find. On Solstice morning, a ceremony is again held at 'opening' time across the fence by the heelstone. Protests at lack of access continue after.

FEB 92. With the election rumoured to be in April, Salisbury Council meets earlier than usual to approve a new procession order. Labour proposes that before any more orders are sought, attempts should be made to bring all interested parties together for talks about a solution. Lib Dems and Greens support this, but Tories vote it down.

MAR 92. English Heritage announce the Stones will be closed again for the Summer Solstice. Their PR dept announce they will be taking out injunctions immediately. English Heritage say they won't, as they wouldn't know who to injunct.

Salisbury Council apply for a procession order, but only from 17th to 21st June, as the 'largest military airshow in the world' is to be held on the edge of the 'zone' the weekend before the Solstice.

General Election announced. Tory manifesto includes new law against squatting and a review of the Caravan Sites Act with the object of preventing unauthorised gatherings.

A member of the Solstice Trust stands as a candidate for Salisbury, for the 'Save Wessex from English Heritage' Party. Gets much local publicity for criticism of their actions over Stonehenge, Old Sarum, rights of way and other ancient rights. Press Association censors the registered name of the Party in spite of protest, and name does not appear in national papers.

At the Equinox, the authorities decide not to close the track by the Stones. After two years in exile, a small equinox party is held overnight on the track. English Heritage refuse to allow Druids even to pay to enter with the tourists for a ceremony by the heelstone across the fence with those outside. A site 200 yards down the road is rejected and celebrations take place in the road. English Heritage officials say they will not open the Stones as: 1) they claim those who did not come would think it unfair if those who did were let in. 2) That in spite of there being more than twice as many security guards as people wanting access, they could not 'guarantee' the safety of the Stones. They say they are thinking of allowing some people in at Winter Solstice, but how these two excuses would be overcome is not explained.

Lord Montagu, Chairman of English Heritage, retires, saying he is disappointed that after eight years 'Stonehenge remains a perplexing problem.'

APR 92. On April fools day Jocelyn Stevens takes over from Lord Montagu, and a local newspaper carries a front page spoof story on Stonehenge being sold and moved to Japan.

European Commission of Human Rights decides not to hear the case against the UK over access to the Stones, without explanation.

Tories re-elected. Ministry of National Heritage formed with David Mellor as Secretary of State for Arts, Sport, the BBC etc - and English Heritage. Robert Key, Tory MP for Salisbury, re-elected with a reduced majority after an election campaign in which Stonehenge was a local issue, is appointed Minister for National Heritage.

MAY 92. Avon free festival is moved by police to Castlemorton near Malvern. Media go crazy, with calls for more police powers in massive press coverage that affects all events for the rest of the year. Police set up national KGB-style intelligence network to "target" alternative gatherings.

JUN 92. A group of archaeologists publicly criticise English Heritage's refusal to open the Stones, and say they will go for the Solstice.

Sir David Mitchell, Tory MP for the Beanfield area, suggests an MoD site should be found for the Solstice. Robert Key (Salisbury) tells him to shut up.

As the Stonehenge walk nears the so called "exclusion zone" for processions amidst local paranoia over a Castlemorton sized rave, police try to scare people off with section 14 notices under the Public Order Act, supposedly banning any gathering of 20 people anywhere in two counties. Martin from Worthing is "arrested" under s14 and held for 10 days for answering his telephone. Police try to shut down TAT helpline.

Campaign for Pagan and Druidic Rights at Stonehenge holds public meeting in Salisbury.

A few hundred people gather at Grately and set up a small stage in the woods. Site is blockaded by police.

Five French TV crews follow events for a documentary programme. 32 arrests at the Stones on solstice morning, including one of the French TV crews. All but three released without charge. Group of archaeologists turned away.

English Heritage tell local radio they will re-open at 4pm. Some walkers return in the afternoon and police close the road. Confused tourists park on the A303 and block it, allowing others to reach the Stones.

'Independent' claims English Heritage say we attacked Stones with power tools at Autumn Equinox in 1990.

Cost of Operation Solstice is said to be £246,450.

Glastonbury takes place the next weekend with no free field travellers, but Stonehenge walkers get in and set up Campa cafe.

JUL 92. In an unprecedented TV stunt, DHSS issue giro's in form of the press from a table on the site of a festival at Kerry Wales. "Sponging Scum" say the press, quoting hugely exaggerated payouts.

AVG 92. Government announces dole crackdown on travellers. Turn out to be a way of tricking other claimants out of their benefit as well.

Hants police announce Torpedo Town festival will not happen. In spite of massed riot police, two festivals take place, at Romsey and Otterbourne. Sites are blockaded by police. Gate hut incinerator plant on the Otterbourne site is burnt down £10m/£1m/£100,000 damage screams press headlines. Ministers criticised over "safe havens" suggestion for sites for hippies and quickly drop it. Public debate over travellers/festivals intensifies. "Friends of the Earth" says Jonathon Porritt.

Government announces plans to scrap Caravan Sites Act which obliges councils to provide sites for travellers. Consultation paper issued suggesting criminalisation of camping or living without permission. Gypsy and traveller cultures to be outlawed.

End of season festivals hampered by massive illegal police operations.

SEP 92. Police at Bristol use section 14 (see JUN) to claim that more than three people is an illegal gathering, and arrest protesters trying to stop Tesco chopping down a row of trees.

At the Equinox, friendly locals offer the garden of an empty house in Amesbury as a campsite. With the Stones closed again Druids and others do it in the road. Security guards are annoyed and tourists curious as the fence is covered with balloons several times during the day.

English Heritage say they want to talk, but David Mellor, Minister for Heritage, has written a letter revealing the position is unchanged. David Mellor resigns in disgrace.

OCT 92. Only druids turn up for a meeting with English Heritage. Last year's undertaking to try and open this Winter is dropped. Now they say maybe next Winter with tickets, but only if there are no more festivals or raves anywhere in the meantime! Druids think Heritage are beginning to worry about the cost of lots of security guards.

Edward Cullinan Architects are chosen to build the new Visitor Centre north of the Stones, although planning permission has been refused. A public enquiry is expected in March.

PM Major ends his speech to Tory party conference with a rabble-rousing tirade against 'new age travellers', saying 'don't want to understand them.'

English Heritage announce plans to dispose of half their sites to save money. Scheme is widely criticised, and privatisation sell off is denied. Sites and costs are to be passed to local councils and groups, they say, but nobody has been consulted, not even their own official Advisory Group, who are legally responsible for the sites. Stonehenge is to be kept as the "flagship", on which resources would be "targeted". Chairman Stevens, blamed for drawing up the plans in secret, is condemned in the Commons as "an unsuitable ideological ignoramus".

Magistrates in Andover find Martin from Worthing guilty of being an organiser of the Solstice festival. He appeals.

NOV 92. Wiltshire council votes police £1/4m for next year's Solstice operation + £1/4m for a new hanger for their helicopter cutting school and community centre budgets to pay for them.

More debates on TV and radio as closing date for comments on Caravan Sites Act consultation paper approaches. More than 60 letters received by DoE from councils, organisations and individuals, none believed to be in favour of the unworkable proposals.

Planning permission is sought for a huge new Artillery Museum near the proposed Stonehenge Visitor Centre, to house the world's largest collection of military guns. Planners advise council to approve.

MP Robert Key calls on English Heritage to withdraw their controversial Visitor Centre plans as local councils face £1/2 bill for enquiry.

Steering group meets in Bristol to set up Stonehenge Access Conference to discuss how groups with different interests can work together at Solstices.

DEC 92. Right turns from road past Henge onto A303 banned for safety reasons.

Jocelyn Stevens to face Select Committee enquiry in the Commons due to "public disquiet" over disposal plans for Heritage sites.

Wiltshire council vote for "a meeting of all interested parties" to try and find a way of avoiding huge police bills every Solstice.

Dear Folks,

EH have recently scored their biggest own goal for a long while. Under the new 'Captain' of Jocelyn Stevens esq. EH have made plans to dissolve their responsibility for managing and maintaining some of the less well known and/or financial loss making sites in Britain. In short this amounts to an admission that EH's 'raison d'etre' is to make a profit from the country's historical sites. 'Concern' for their upkeep is just a PR exercise- lip service paid to an important job but given a low priority in practical terms, not counting toll booths to let people in, fences to keep people out and carparks and cafes.

Between EH and NT (and presently the DoE) there has been the greatest amount of archaeological damage/ physical development on and about the site of Stonehenge. These people have built roads and carparks, erected gates, fences and tacky tourist notices, dug a tunnel and laid a tarmac path in close proximity to the inner stone circle. They charge you money to see (but not to touch) something that they 'market' as a piece of sterile/dead history. They don't know that Stonehenge is Alive or if they do they do not wish to share it's energy with you or I. After all this EH claim it is those people who wish to use Stonehenge for the purposes it was built for that cause damage at the site. They lie about people at solstice and equinox celebrations gouging marks on the Stones and complain about a little wax spilled from a ceremonial candle as though it were the same group of people who had caused the real damage at Stonehenge ie EH, NT, DoE and Salisbury District Council.

There are plans to upgrade the A303 to a dual carriageway/Motorway. To our knowledge EH and NT have not made any comment about the destructive environmental and archaeological impact this will have at Stonehenge. The district council regularly close ancient byways used for centuries yet make no noises about the planned development of the main road near Stonehenge.

The Wiltshire police are happy to use the local community's money to hassle other people who have brought business to the local economy (ask the Amesbury Board of Trade) instead of catching real criminals. These authorities prostitute Stonehenge and betray the spirit of the deed of gift (leaving the Stones to the people) in the name of Christian society. Well there was a man once who went to the temple and saw that those in authority were corrupt so he chased off the money changers and turned over their tables and said of them "Ye hypocrites". EH et al take heed.

Andy

Letter from Karelia == 9 December 1992
Sitting on my bus roof with 3 blankets and 2 kids watching the monster shadow eating up the moon - one said "wow", another "wicked" - then they slept while I waited and smoked a toast dreaming of ancient full moon festivals, the dread and wonder of it, the moon earth and sun in a dead straight line, the time to synchronise watches, to reset the Aubrey hole moon marker stones - their language may have been an early form of Welsh or closer to Karelian Finnish or Siberian Lapp; did they have wheels or rollers, could they read and write on wood - we know they could calculate and knew more of predicting eclipses than you or I ('know' in the sense of knowing how to, how to use a tool, not why - their theories and gods can only be dreamed of). Stonehenge is writing in stone (and evidence of teamwork (and I'd guess slavery (in your imaginings do you have the mathematicians and warriors on ponies, sledges, boats, chariots))) as the moon glimmered then glinted in an arc top left and kissed her tiny hand and because it's the full moon nearest Winter Solstice yelled across site "Happy New Year!" ===(diceGeorge)=====

STONEHENGE CAMPAIGN APPEAL

The Stonehenge Campaign needs resources to keep up it's work. Money, stamps, paper, stationery, artwork, info, transport etc. If you would like to help please contact us c/o 99 Torriano Ave, or come to any of the open meetings held on the first Wed of every month (except Jan)- see calendar.

Celebrating at Stonehenge!

Good gathering places: Amesbury Recreation Ground car park (2 miles from Stonehenge) & Amesbury town car park.
Just before/after equinoxes and solstices: Figsbury Ring, 5 miles NE Salisbury A30, 15 miles from Stonehenge. Grateley Green Lane, 1 mile S A303 Cholderton turnoff, 7 miles from Stonehenge.
Other times: Byways crossing with A303 and A344 by Stonehenge or, seeing as it is there, the carpark itself. NB these places are usually closed to vehicles at equinoxes and solstices. EH have a recent habit of closing the Stones to everyone except about 100 security guards at the time of equinoxes and solstices. Many/all people who have turned up at other times have simply hopped over the fence and entered Stonehenge unhindered.

Hello, What about a site meeting for the Stonehenge Campaign. I haven't been invited to one in four years.

John Rety
